Paragraphs of the Week

The Export-Import Bank announced last week that its trustees had approved loans of $20,000,000 to China, $10,000,000 to Denmark, and $1,000,000 to Iceland for financing exports to those countries.

Betsy Cushing Roosevelt was given a divorce from James Roosevelt, the President's oldest son, at Los Angeles last week. She received a settlement of $65,000 at once and her choice of $50,000 more in five years or $5,000 annually until she remarries. Their children will receive payments until they are 21 years old, totalling $78,000.

The uncompleted liner, Queen Elizabeth, sister ship to the Queen Mary, was docked at New York March 7, after a six-day voyage from England. The 85,000 ton vessel is to be "stored for the duration of the war" beside the Normandie and Queen Mary in the safety of New York's neutral harbor.

It is reported that the war department is considering sale of its latest 400 -miles-an-hour fighting planes to France and Britain. The Army Air Corps must approve the foreign sales before they can be completed. The planes under consideration were ordered for U. S. service less than a year ago.

John West, Berlin, N. H., pilot, carried Mrs. Eva Dumoulin by plane from Farmachenee Lake to Berlin last Thursday. She was much improved at last reports, though quite exhausted when the flier landed her at the airport. It was West's second flight to the woman's home, having flown there Monday night with Dr. Edward McGee to give emergency treatment.

About 5,000 rabbits were transferred from Hancock and Washington counties to central and southern Maine during the last week-end. According to fish and game officials, more than 2,500 of the animals were caught in one day in the heavily stocked counties. The Fish and Game department furnished the rabbits, but shipping charges had to be paid by organizations that had requested them.

Maine's old age assistance payments for February were made to 14,054 persons, which called for expenditure of $291,892. These were supplied half from State and half from Federal funds. Director Harry E. Henderson says the number of persons receiving such aid has not changed much in the past few months.

Two CCC camps in Maine may be closed permanently by a tentative plan for reducing the number of camps in the country, if Congress curtails the appropriation for the next fiscal year. A number of camps will be closed seasonally. The Maine camps which will be affected are a private forest camp at North Whitefield, Lincoln county and Acadia National Park camp at Southwest Harbor, Hancock county.

Public Safety Commissioner E. M. McSweeney of Massachusetts recommends enactment of a National speed limit to curb motor vehicle accidents and deaths on the highways. He believes the speed limit on open roads should be set at 50 miles per hour, and driving in cities or towns should be held to 25 or 30 miles an hour.

Clarence E. Mulford, Maine author of "western thrillers," was notified this week that he had been awarded the certificate laureate and a medal from the Institute Littéraire et Artistique de France in appreciation of a book written at Fryeburg in 1933.

Henry Austin is ill at his home on Vernon Street.

IN SUPERIOR COURT

Douglass Buotte of Rumford, who alleged he found a mouse in a bottle of beverage, was awarded $50 by the jury after two hours' deliberation Friday morning. He had sought to recover $10,000 from the Vincent Bottling Co., Inc., of Auburn.

Wesley E. Pierce and John H. Pierce, both of Westbrook, pleaded guilty to a charge of breaking, entering and larceny. Wesley Pierce was sentenced to serve two to four years in State prison, and John Pierce was sentenced to the men's reformatory.

Robert Allen and Raymond Greenlaw of Paris were sentenced to the reformatory after pleading guilty to breaking, entering and larceny. Allen was placed on probation for two years.

The damage suits of Miss Annette Howe of Hartford, Conn., against Theresa Houde for $10,000, and against Miss Houde's mother, Christina Houde, for $10,000, resulted in a verdict for the defendants Tuesday when Justice Emery ordered a directed verdict for the defendants.

William Tarbox of Porter, indicted on a rape charge, pleaded guilty and paid a fine of $500.

Charged with illegally shooting a moose, Charles Gammon of North Waterford appeared to have a heart attack while on the stand as the first defense witness Wednesday. Justice Emery considered it unwise to proceed and ordered the case continued until June.

GOULD SENIOR PLAY NEXT WEDNESDAY EVENING

On Wednesday evening, March 20, at eight o'clock in the William Bingham Gymnasium, the Senior Class of Gould Academy will present the three act comedy, "Big Hearted Herbert."

"This play deals at length with Herbert Kalness, a self-made business man, who insists that his family must be brought up in the plain traditions and who seems unable to adjust his viewpoint to ward the rising generation.

In the course of the play which embodies many amusing and even hilarious situations, matters seem to go from bad to worse, as far as Herbert Kalness is concerned. But when his family finally embraces his plain tradition, literally, a satisfactory change is brought about, and a happy ending is the result.

Sherman Williamson, who is cast in the leading role, makes a very convincing Herbert Kalness, and as his wife, Elizabeth Kalness, Anne Ring is all that a patient and long-suffering wife should be. The other members of the cast who so ably support these two are: Edward Wheeler, Esther Pike, Nathaniel Bartholomae, Mary Buck, Irving Brown, Elizabeth McLaron, Minot Clapp, Bernard Bartlett, Jean Cameron, Henry Haley and Kathryn Davis.

MRS. FRANCIS B. TUELL

Mrs. Sadie Lunetta Tuell died at her home on Broad Street Sunday morning after a few days illness.

She was born in Bethel Nov. 19, 1855, the daughter of Woodsum and Ann Brackett Mason. She married Dr. Francis B. Tuell, who died 15 years ago. Mrs. Tuell attended Gould Academy and was a member of the Congregational Church.

Surviving are a daughter, Mrs. Mildred Carlson of Milton, Mass.; two sons, Gilbert of Fairhaven, Mass., and Charles of Bethel; six Cella Gorman, Syll LeClair, Charles grandchildren; a sister, Mrs. Annie Freeman, Arthur Cutler, Milo McJohnson, and a brother, Charles Allister, J. P. Butts, Eva Herrick, Mason, both of Pomona, Calif. John Howe, Marjorie McAllister.

Funeral services were held at Alma Thurston, William Chapman, her late home Tuesday afternoon. Ashby Tibbets, Wilbur Myers, Rev. Herbert T. Wallace officiating. Robert Hastings, Edmund Smith. Burial was at Riverside Cemetery.

Miss Mary Sanborn is spending a few days in Portland and Boston, day evening.

CORPORATION RAISES PAY OF NIGHT POLICE

The selection of Bethel Village Corporation officials at the annual meeting Monday evening proceeded with utmost harmony. Although there were several changes, as past officers would not accept reelection, the new nominees encountered no opposition and were elected on one ballot.

The only discussion of the evening centered on the amount to be raised for payment of a night watchman. Opened by Fred Merrill, who held that the present pay ($21 a week) was too small for the work now required, the question was further discussed by F. E. Russell, Lloyd Luxton, Gerard Williams, Herbert R. Rowe, Arthur Cutler, Eugene Van, Elmer Bean, and Philip Sayles. It was argued that it was needless for the officer to have to cover such distance that a car be necessary; that in a car he cannot give the desired results in detecting fires or any mischief requiring his attention, especially in the fraction of each hour in which the rounds of the village can be made by car. All this was met by an explanation of the present system of watchman's boxes, and one or two examples of the officer's work. The voters decided to raise $100 more than last year, thus approving the present method of operation.

BETHEL GIRL IN WAR-TIME LONDON

The following is from a letter recently received by Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Herrick from their daughter, Miss Kathryn Herrick, who is teaching in London, England.

Whatever impressions may have been conveyed across the Atlantic by films, radio, and the press, it cannot be said that life in London during war time is uninteresting. Even though sand bags, taped windows and ARP shelters dominate the scene, the daily routine of life goes on more or less normally.

Of some things one can not be too sure; transportation for instance, trains and busses may be from five minutes to five hours off schedule. Sugar, bacon and butter are rationed and purchasable only by ration books at registered shops. Meat may be a little scarce one week-end, eggs the next. Yet on the whole the quantity of food seems quite adequate for public consumption. A shortage of coal is not uncommon while gas and electricity rates have risen higher and higher. Paper is supposedly scarce enough to warrant a government "save-your-waste-paper" campaign. Flashlight batteries are temporarily the most uncertain and most needed commodities on sale. Naturally with a great demand come higher prices and keen competition. Often one is obliged to buy a whole new "torch" in order to get a battery. Still there are no objections, not even grumbles.

BOOTS, BOOTS, BOOTS!

The SNAPSHOT GUILD MAKE A PICTURE SERIES

This young gossip is an ideal subject for a picture series. Try your hand at story-telling "sequence pictures"—they provide lots of snapshot fun.

FOR real camera fun, try your hand at taking a picture series —a group of pictures that fit together and tell a connected story.

It's easy to do—easier than taking the same number of individual, unconnected pictures. And because the shots work together, each helping the others, the results tend to be more interesting.

The trick is to pick a starting point—and the rest of the series just seems to follow naturally. Pictures already in your album will give you ideas for "series stories."
Just look through the album—
choose a picture—and ask yourself,
"What story could I develop from this?"

For example, consider the picture of the little girl at the top as the starting point for a story series. She's a perfect gossip. Then one might make a sequence of shots
—each one with a slightly different expression as if she were holding a long, gossiping conversation. Arrange these pictures in the album.

ing. Dinner was served at noon to eight women and two children.

The Parent-Teacher's Association held their regular meeting Tuesday evening, this week, at the schoolhouse. Mrs. George Duke of Errol, N. H., was the guest speaker.

She gave an interesting talk on social work, and told of some of her experiences in that work. Mrs.
Scott Coolidge and Mrs. Kenneth Hinkley served refreshments after the meeting.

Dublin's Club of Unemployed
The Mount Street club of unemployed in Dublin has been so successful it is branching out by taking over Larkfield farm to supply produce to its members. It already has a carpenter shop, which supplies furniture; a tailor shop, a bakery, a barber shop, a weaving machine and a sock-making machine.
The men work at the club producing any useful article they can, and in return receive tokens for the number of hours worked. These tokens can be exchanged for the products of other members.

Mississippi Bubble

The Mississippi Bubble was a speculative project that demoralized the financial condition of France in the early part of the Eighteenth century. Its promoter, a Scotch economist named John Law, was a friend of the French regent, the duke of Orleans. When the regent assumed control, in 1715, he found that the extravagance of the late king, Louis XIV, had played havoc with the financial affairs of the kingdom. Law's efforts to advise and assist the regent culminated, in 1717, in the organization of a vast association for trade, to be known as the Mississippi company. The French government granted to the company the territory of Louisiana, an indefinite region about which there were many wild and extravagant rumors. A bank was formed, with Law as director, shares were sold to the public, and the French people plunged into an orgy of speculation. The inflated scheme, which thousands expected would bring them wealth and happiness, collapsed in July, 1720, when the bank stopped payment. Law fled to Venice, where, nine years afterward,
he died neglected and poor.

Original Occupation

One of the most original occupations ever developed in the early history of California was that of a blind Spanish grandmother living near Phoenix Lake who devoted her entire time to knitting woolen tails for the family cow. The cow, it seems, was tailless and defenseless against flies and other insects. The grandmother kept the cow supplied with two new woolen tails each year which were attached to the stump of the original tail.

Slaughtering With Electricity Australia has evolved a new and more humane way of slaughtering animals for market. It is an electric "stunner." So far it has been used for pigs and has proved more economical than killing by hand.
The "stunner" is placed over the ears of the animals, which are immediately rendered unconscious for ten minutes.

Lone Sentinel

Lonesomest job on the western front is that of this royal artillery telephonist who sits alone with his instrument and advises the British battery on its target accuracy, giving it the correct range.

Milwaukee's Blind Bowlers

The Friday night scene at a Milwaukee bowling alley differs little from the ordinary night in this center of the tenpin sport, but the bowlers are blind. Each man steps surely to the racks, balances a ball carefully to be sure he has the right one, steps into position, strides forward and shoots the ball down the alley. Then the viewers notice there's no cheering for a strike until an attendant calls out: "A strike, Jim!" Or perhaps the kegler gets a bad split and when the numbers of the pins left standing are called there's a sympathetic groan. Bowling and other sports are helping to rebuild the confidence of the 23 members of the Milwaukee Athletic Club for the Blind. The night that Walter Wenzel bowled a 207 game, for instance, marked another triumph and gave his sightless comrades a new goal. Bowling, swimming and gymnastics are their favorite sports, but the members also have tried golf and a modified form of baseball.

Japanese Memorial to Premier Tokyo, Japan, will preserve the residence of Korekijo Takahashi, once premier and many times finance minister, as a memorial park. Soon after the financier-statesman was murdered by soldiers in the outbreak of February 26, 1936, his son gave the residence to the city. The house was moved to Tama cemetery. Takahashi had a three-story warehouse on the property. In it he stored images of Buddha, picture scrolls, objects of art and many books in English. The warehouse will be made into a memorial hall.

FELT—CUSHMAN

Franklin Grange hall, Bryant Pond, was the scene of a very pretty wedding on Saturday evening, March 9, when Beatrice Minnie Cushman of North Woodstock became the bride of Linwood Newton Felt of South Woodstock.

At 8.30, to the strains of the wedding march played by Mrs. Floyd Redman, the bridal party entered the hall, which was beautifully decorated with white streams and a white wedding bell suspending from the center. A large basket of flowers completed the decorations.

The bride was given in marriage by her father and was very becomingly gowned in a princess style dress of blue taffeta and carried a colonial bouquet of mixed flowers. A sister, Mrs. Erma McGuire of West Peru, was the bride's only attendant. She also wore light blue and carried a colonial bouquet.

The groom was attended by his brother, Richard Felt.

Little Avis Cushman, another sister of the bride, was ring bearer and was dressed in yellow taffeta. The double ring service was performed by Rev. Alton Verrill.

Nearly 200 guests witnessed the ceremony and the reception which followed. In the receiving line with the bride and groom were their parents.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Cushman. She graduated from Woodstock High School in the class of 1938, and later entered the school of nursing at the C. M. G. Hospital, where she trained for nearly a year.

The groom is the second son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert N. Felt. He graduated from Woodstock High School in 1934 and attended the University of Maine for one year.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Felt are popular members of Franklin Grange, Mr. Felt being a Past Master.

During the evening a beautiful wedding cake was presented the young couple by the groom's mother, Mrs. Felt. The cake was cut by the bride and distributed to the guests. Ice cream and cake were also served.

The happy pair left amidst showers of rice and confetti for a brief honeymoon. The best wishes of their host of friends go with them to their new home at Turner, where Mr. Felt will be in charge of a large dairy farm.

The first cars were built in the style of coaches. Coaches took the name from Kocs Hungary, where they were first made.

BETHEL GIRL IN LONDON

because of these little inconveniences. A "war-time" emergency seems to excuse everything.

On the other hand, there are some things of which one can be very certain, chief among which is the nightly black-out. Save on rare moonlight nights people stumble about quite cheerfully in the dark bumping into others and forever getting lost. Except for tiny luminous "open" signs on shops and restaurants and the dim dash lights on taxis and busses, the streets are apparently rows of black nothingness. One can be very certain that if there is the faintest crack of light showing from any door or window he will be promptly visited by the local air raid warden who will stay until the leakage has been satisfactorily repaired.

Almost daily the Admiralty will issue statements that "it regrets the loss of H. M. S. So and So" and the Ministry of Information will state that "enemy planes were sighted over the Thames Estuary."

How many losses are not reported to the public is a matter of pure conjecture. Milg propaganda over the British Broadcasting Co. and in the news reels is ever certain of all democracies, the United States is also the nightly broadcast of that champion of propaganda, Lord Haw Haw, to whom thousands of British and French listen nightly.

Propaganda and news censorship go hand in hand. Fortunate indeed are listeners in the United States who, it is admitted over here, know far more of what is going on in war-torn Europe than we ourselves.

All the war goes on, at least, at sea, and preparations are under way for next spring's expected big offensive. The English people with amazing calm and level headedness are cooperating with their government in every way so as to make possible the victory of which they are so certain.

The prevailing idea is not perhaps so much to win a great victory over Germany but to avoid defeat, for every Englishman feels confident that the economic resources of their great empire will be the decisive factor in the end. There is, as yet, no animosity toward the German people nor is there the war fever that already exists in France. One might even accuse the English of being apathetic towards the war (apathetically cooperative however) so disinterested in fact that they scarcely questioned Mr. Chamberlain's removal of the Sec. of war, Mr. Horne-Belisha. But little do they realize, those outside Whitehall, that this war is being fought as much to save the Empire as to put an end to Hitlerism. Before it is finished there will likely be an uprising in India, where members of independence have been smoldering for the past two or three years—a fact little known to the man on the street. South Africa may cause unexpected trouble sooner or later. Even the Canadian and Australian troops admit they are fighting more for the "adventure" than for the Empire.

Radical changes may be brought about in this greatest of Empires before this present war is brought to a close; it might, as Hitler predicts, even dissolve. If so, however, it won't be without a terrific fight made possible by the magnificent spirit of a people, who as in 1913 are already looking to the greatest of all democracies, the United States of America for help in bringing about a new and better world peace.

THE STORY

CHAPTER I—Captain Carl Norwood has been sent from his native England to the Kadir River district in India, along with his indispensable manservant, Moses O'Leary, soldier of fortune. Norwood's job is to survey the district to determine whether a valuable secret diamond mine belongs to the temple priests or to the ruler, the Maharajah of Kadir.

CHAPTER II—Norwood calls on the British Residency to pay his initial respects. On his way he catches a glimpse of two women in a palace carriage, one of whom is young and beautiful. The other woman he knows to be the Maharajah's wife. O'Leary later tells him that the young woman is an American girl named Lynn Harding, who with her aunt, Mrs. Deborah Harding, is a guest at the palace.

CHAPTER III—Mrs. Harding and Lynn, her niece, are guests at the Maharajah's palace. On a night when Mrs. Harding is alone, she is startled by the palace for aid. Prince Rundhia, handsome, spoiled nephew of the ruler, comes to her rescue and takes her back to the palace where he meets Lynn.

CHAPTER IV—At a banquet that night in the palace, attended by Captain Norwood, Mrs. Harding takes one of the palace doctor's pills and becomes violently ill. She is placed in bed and arrangements are made for Lynn to move out of the quarters with her aunt and stay with the Maharajah.

CHAPTER V—That evening Prince Rundhia attempts to make love to Lynn. She is unwilling to listen to him, and at the crucial moment Norwood appears on the scene, much to Rundhia's disgust. Norwood sees her home.

CHAPTER VI—O'Leary has located the secret entrance to the diamond mine which is being worked by the temple priests. He takes Norwood to the mine, where death is narrowly averted when a cobra is thrown in Norwood's face. Later Norwood visits the Brahmin priests, one of whom style chips a packet of diamonds in his pocket, unknown to Norwood. They are intended as a bribe.

CHAPTER VII

Norwood left his horse in charge of the sala at the palace front gate. He intended to return and ride up the long drive to the front door for this formal call on the Maharajah. But the footpath to the guesthouse was shorter than the winding carriage-road, so he walked, to leave the lodgings for Mrs. Harding. On the way he saw Lynn and Rundhia.

Lynn was no longer in riding breeches. She looked delicious in a frock of pale green print and a wide leghorn hat. Norwood wasn't sure, but he suspected she knew she could be seen from the guesthouse veranda, and that Rundhia did not know. She and Rundhia were laughing. Suddenly Rundhia watched her hat off, used it as a shield to hide behind, caught her in his arms and kissed her. It was no feat of a hero. It was an experience Lynn did make a show of resistance. She struggled free and recovered her hat.

Norwood's view of it, against the background of the leghorn hat, made him set his jaw. But he relaxed it again and smiled a bit grimly, a bit maliciously. From the opposite direction he had heard what sounded like an oath although it was nothing worse than the well bred and most tactfully guarded and "fluffy."

Aunt Deborah Harding had also seen that lingering and only laughingly resisted kiss.

Aunt was on the screened veranda, propped on pillows, on a reed chaise longue, with a table beside her. A native servant was just in the act of removing a tray of breakfast things.

"May I step ashore," asked Norwood. "Are you purdah?"

"What is it? I can't see you. Oh, yes, Captain Norwood, come in if you can bear the sight of me. I should look presentable. I never had so many women in all my life to push out of my door. This is my second attempt at a meal this morning. You'll have to run away if I can't keep it down. What has brought you away at this hour?"

"I'm not for the dining room," thought Lynn. "I've come to see you."

"Will you bring my niece here?"

"She's here and she's talking to someone. I want her to come here and talk to me. Will you tell her I said so, and please don't take no for an answer."

Norwood strolled across the lawn, tapping his boots with a riding whip. He coughed a couple of times. By the time he had peered around the trees, Lynn and Rundhia were seated opposite each other on wicker-work chairs. Lynn seemed unself-conscious. Rundhia looked venomously sly; he offered Norwood no greeting whatever.

"I happened to be calling on your aunt," said Norwood, "and she asked me to say that she wants to see you."

Lynn looked dubious: "What sort of mood is she in?"

"Very polite to me," said Norwood.

"That's a danger signal. She can't be polite to one person at a time. I think I won't go."

"You will have to pardon me," said Norwood, "but I agreed to bring you."

"You always do what you say you will?"

"Yes," he looked straight at Rundhia, who ignored him.

"Prince Rundhia," said Lynn, "is going to show me the jewel room."

"Is he?" said Norwood.

Rundhia winced noticeably: "Perhaps you'd better go," he said to Lynn. "There's lots of time. She'll have her tantrum out, and you can meet me later."

Lynn compared them, as clearly as if she had said it aloud. Her smile was a bit forced when her eyes met Norwood's:

"Do you always order people?" she demanded. "Don't you ever say please?"

He laughed. "I can't kneel. Breeches too tight."

"What will you do if I won't come?"

"Scream," he answered.

"I dare you."

"Tuesday is my day for screaming. Are you game to wait here until Tuesday?"

"No. I'm coming with you." She glanced at Rundhia: "You'll excuse us?"

"I excuse you," he answered.

Norwood looked so comfortless that Lynn noticed it:

"What are you worried about?"

"Oh, nothing. I was wondering what your aunt eats."

She laughed at him. "Dear! That's the very first time you haven't spoken like a patched rascal."

"I told a part of the truth. I am worried about you."

"You needn't be. I'm all right."

She ran forward to speak to her aunt. The tray of breakfast things was being carried out by a palace servant. Norwood stopped the man, inspected the tray, and selected a piece of toast. He looked for something to wrap it in. That reminded him. He groped in his left-hand pocket for the lodger, tore off half the paper in which Stoddart had wrapped the bottle, stuffed the untidy package back, wrapped the toast in the torn-off paper and put that into his right-hand pocket.

"I'm expected at the palace, so I can't stay. Mrs. Harding, I brought you some fresh Indian, in case the doctor's stuff is pretty ancient, as sometimes happens."

He plunged his hand into his tunic pocket and Lynn came to the screen door to receive the bottle. He looked at her, groping with his left hand, trying to pull out the bottle without the untidy paper, but a piece of string, tied with one of Stoddart's hands, prevented. So he pulled out the disgraceful package with a quick smile of apology.

"Hello," said Lynn. "I've dropped something."

He stopped and picked up what lay at his feet. It didn't recognize it. It was a quite small black paper envelope.

"I saw it fall from your pocket," said Lynn.

He opened it. It contained a neatly folded paper of diamonds. Nine large, clear white brilliants shone in the sun. He scowled at them and stuffed the package back into his pocket, evidently upset. He appeared to hope that Lynn hadn't seen the diamonds. He seemed about to mention them, but changed his mind. Lynn thought he seemed suspicious of her. Then suddenly:

"Excuse me, won't you?"

He walked away. Lynn's eyes followed, wondering. He looked like a man who has been hit hard and is trying not to show it.

"Lynn," said her aunt's voice.

"Yes, Aunt."

"Come here!"

Lynn faced about: "Aunt Deborah! I have seen some diamonds at what he dreaded. Or it seemed to me so."

"Lynn, please rearrange my pillows."

It was not Aunt's cultured, conventional voice but the hard, unsympathetic one in which she almost always commanded attention to her comfort as a prelude to the luxury of an explosion of temper.

Two palace women, loaned by the Maharajah, had been fussing with the pillows less than five minutes before. Lynn rearranged them. She waited. Her silence offered the old terragotta no opening, so Aunt Harding abandoned her usual gradual style of attack. She exploded:

"Don't dare to speak to me, you sullied creature, until you have washed your mouth! There is soap and water in the bedroom."

"Aunt!"

"Wash your mouth this minute! I saw you—permitting yourself to be kissed by Prince Rundhia!"

"Aunt, I'm no longer five! Aren't you forgetting?"

"To my humiliation I remember too much! You are old enough at least to try to keep up an appearance of decency."

"Aunt, there's no harm in a kiss after breakfast! It's kisses after midnight that—"

"Don't you dare to try to justify your grossness! Even your graceless father had enough sense of his social position to keep his indecencies out of sight."

"Aunt!"

"Don't 'aunt' me! You inherit your father's wantonness."

"I never knew him," Lynn answered. "I only know what you and other people have told me. Others seem to have admired him. Wasn't that Rundhia was talking to divert attention from his motive."

"Beauty and the beast!" said Rundhia.

"Brande! Brande! You look like secrets in a queue of people."

"My very innocent heart," he answered. "I'm a man back. Can't you see?"

"I don't want to."

He kept his distance. That sinuous right arm of his belated itself. He walked about of her through the narrow anteroom where two turbaned guards saluted respectfully. Rundhia spoke to one of the guards who switched on the electric light in the treasure room. The masonry wall was ten feet thick; the floor a foot thick. The guard closed the door behind them and opened an eye to Lynn could see the guard's eyes.

There was a long table between her and Rundhia, loaded with golden and jewelled ornaments: embossed golden shields, scimitars in gold sheaths, scores of objects such as are carried in procession by the servants of an oriental throne. Electric light shone within lanterns, suspended on chains from the ancient beams. At the far end of the room, on the right, was a huge glass case, in which the famous Kadir diamonds sparkled, stealing color from the jewelled lanterns.

When she glanced at Rundhia again, he had his back to the iron chest and was staring at her, dark-eyed, not smiling noticeably. Lynn accepted the unspoken challenge.

"I am sorry I let you kiss me this morning. I shouldn't have. It wasn't fair. It may have given you a wrong impression."

"The correct one being—"

"Oh, I was just being mischievous. It meant nothing."

"No."

Rundhia eyed her for several seconds without speaking. She didn't feel afraid of him, but every fiber in her being was aware of crisis and to earn a living. God knows what I can do. But I will find something. I accept the odds. I will make a go of it somehow."

Aunt's stare was skeptical, scornful. Lynn turned away.

"Where are you off to now?"

"To the palace. The Maharajah is human. Perhaps she and I can find something to laugh at."

"Very well, Lynn. All your clothes were removed to the palace last night, against my wishes. Go and pack them. If it kills me, we are taking the first boat home, and you may say so to the Maharajah. You may tell her why. If you don't, I will."

"And if you don't," Lynn answered, "the palace women will! They have been listening through the bedroom window. So if you want to get the first malicious word in, you had better be quick! Write a letter, why don't you? I assure you I won't discuss it."

She picked up her tennis racket and unscrewed the frame. It was a hardly conscious gesture: it was much too hot for tennis. She walked out through the screen door, carrying the racket.

As she approached the palace front door, she saw Norwood's horse near the portico. She recognized Norwood's sals, squatting down under the horse's nose, half asleep, instead of flicking flies off the horse as he should.

Then she saw Rundhia. He had been watching for her. One could tell that by his manner. He looked astonishingly handsome in a gray suit of some thin material and a gray silk turban.

"Tennis?" he asked. "In this heat?"

"No. Tantrum! I'm so angry I could kill."

"Don't kill me, Lynn. I'm important. Tell me instead."

Lynn used the racket as if she were returning one of Rundhia's serves. "Would you tell me the truth?"

He grinned. "Well, almost. Who can be in love and tell the whole truth? I will lie to you, of course, about my character. But I will tell the truth about yours! You're a lovely, inspiring, challenging fact. Lynn Harding, you're an event."

"I feel like a skeleton in my own dark closet," she retorted, and Rundhia laughed.

"Come and I'll show you the treasures. Drive away the very memory of Aunt!"

All the way up the palace stairs and along the ancient corridor, Rundhia chattered gaily. Lynn answered in monosyllables perfectly aware that Rundhia was talking to divert attention from his motive.

"Beauty and the beast!" said Rundhia.

"Brande! Brande! You look like secrets in a queue of people."

Simulating calmness that she did not feel, she almost unconsciously moved the tennis racket from one hand to the other.

"Careful with that," he advised.

"Put it down. You might break something. Come over here and see the emeralds."

She did not put down the tennis racket. That would have been obedience. She was obeying no one. It was not obedience that made her walk toward him around the over-loaded table. She was walking straight into danger. She didn't deceive herself about that for a moment. Neither did Rundhia try to deceive her. Passion, confident and self-avowed, glowered in his splendid eyes. They were more arresting than the diamonds in the glass case. He looked bold, experienced, and much more masculinely beautiful than any human being she had ever met. She could feel her heart pounding. And she felt as sure of herself as if she were about to plunge into a warm inviting sea. She didn't hesitate.

"Lynn, I love you!"

Have this love that sweeps me like a storm can't conquer you? Do you suppose you can fire my veins, torture my heart—and not burn in the same ecstasy I said burn! You are as passionate as I am! You are no cold beauty. Come here."

She was against the table. He was pushing her backward. Things were falling off the table. He was kissing her. His face was buried in her hair. She freed her right arm—groped—seized the tennis racket and struck him hard in the face with its edge. Blood. Blood on her frock. Lots of it. Rundhla let go then. He found his handkerchief and held it to his face. Blood.

Lynn gasped, breathless: "What have I done?"

He didn't answer. With the handkerchief to his face he turned away from her.

"Rundhla," she said, "I wouldn't have hurt you for worlds."

"You have broken my heart," he answered.

"Rundhla!"

It was the Maharanee's voice. The great teak door had swung open. The Maharanee stood in the doorway, staring, with the guards behind her. She turned and dismissed the guards.

"Rundhla, what have you been doing? There is blood on Lynn's frock! Lynn! Darling, what has he done to you?"

"No harm," Lynn answered. She turned to hide the blood and the rip in her frock.

The Maharanee spoke to Rundhla, in his own language, vehemently, for about a minute. She was at no loss for words. She let him have it with the governed directed anger that cuts like a whip. Then, in English, for Lynn's benefit:

"Don't play for sympathy! That is no more than one of your usual nose-bleeds! Let your doctor attend to it. Go!"

Rundhla strode from the room.

The Maharanee came and put her arm around Lynn:

"Lynn, Lynn darling, I am too ashamed to tell you how I feel. Has he hurt you? Are you all right? I have told him I will neither pay his debts nor speak to him again until he has your full forgiveness."

New 'Back Drop' Aids in Television Transmitting

A black "back drop" for the screens of television transmitting tubes results in more sharply focused and detailed television image according to a patent (No. 2,156,391) issued to Willard Hickok of Bloomfield, N. J.

The "back drop" is a film of graphite at the back of the transparent mica support on which are mounted the photo-electric elements that convert the scene being televised into an electric image which is broadcast through the ether.

It is explained that when the scene is focused on the ordinary photo-electric screen of the "telescope" tube, light from the image is reflected, bounces off the walls of the tube back on to the screen so that a double image may be formed. At the same time the photo-electric elements scatter the light. All this, it is indicated, blurs and makes hazy the image to be broadcast.

The black "back drop," which is the subject of the patent, on the other hand, absorbs the light which would thus ordinarily be reflected. The result is a sharper, more detailed image.
